GRANDMA'S SLOP BUCKET

One of the childhood memories I have of my grandma and granddad's house in Reader, West Virginia, was the "slop bucket" they kept by the kitchen sink. Now, for those of you who don't know what a slop bucket is, it was a bucket that contained all the scraps from previous meals. My grandma didn't have a garbage disposal, so following a meal, the "scraps" from dinner went into the slop bucket. When it filled up, my granddad would take it out back and bury the contents of the bucket.

Now this particular "slop bucket" had a lid—because it needed one! There was no use in exposing the decaying scraps from previous meals. Those meals were over, and those remaining scraps were sealed up and were to be buried in the backyard by the garden.

If only we all had and used our own personal "slop buckets." What do I mean? Well, how often do you get into a little fuss with someone, and before you know it, you dump out the scraps from previous conflicts? Things that should be forgiven, resolved, and buried away, never to be mentioned again, often reappear when we find ourselves in confrontation.

Listen, when something finds its way into a "slop bucket," there's where it needs to stay. Put a lid on it, and when it gets full, go bury it.

— Steve Higginbotham

Urgency

George was going up to bed when his wife told him that he'd left the light on in the garden shed, which she could see from the bedroom window.

George opened the back door to go turn off the light but saw that there were people in the shed stealing things.

He phoned the police, who asked "Is someone in your house?" and he said no. Then they said that all patrols were busy, and that he should simply lock his door and an officer would be along when available.

George said, "Okay," hung up, and counted to thirty, and phoned the police again.

"Hello, I just called you a few seconds ago because there were people in my shed. Well, don't worry about them now 'cause I've just shot them all." Then he hung up.

Within five minutes three police cars, an Armed Response unit, and an ambulance showed up at George's residence.

Of course, the police caught the burglars red-handed. One of the policemen said to George: "I thought you said that you shot them!"

George said, "I thought you said there was nobody available!"
